Part One: Reading

Read the text carefully the do the activities.

Shopaholism, or shopping addiction, is a mental health disorder and can cause severe consequences. It is described as the desire to spend money, regardless of need.

People with this disorder may be addicted to buy products such as clothes, jewelry, food or beauty products. Shopaholics get the same behavior and manners as drunkards; overconsumers of alcohol. They feel intense euphoria or excitement after making purchases, steal or lie in order to continue shopping but fail in attempts to stop it.

In many cases, shopping addiction may result from deeper emotional issues or mental health conditions. Shopaholics spend most of their time shopping in supermarkets buying products needlessly. This behavior is generally due to depression, loneliness and anxiety. In some cases shopaholics have an emotional "black out".

To cope with shopaholism, there are treatments that aim to face the issue and to develop new healthy ways. Yet, the best efficient remedy is an effective psychological care.
